"...Nowadays, one feels compelled to live as though one were going to die tomorrow. As though one knew, to a certainty, that tomorrow, at any moment, at any time, one would never again be quite as one was today or quite as one is now." Alain de Botton The final day of my American experience has dawned. I spent my whole day either in the school library or my room. I read papers, journals and books and took notes on my laptop. There was a little rest at 3:00 pm but otherwise, it's been going on like this. I had plans to hang out with friends at the varsity college, like I usually did. I even tried my best to behave like I was really into getting to know them better, but I couldn't help but feel like an observer, an outsider. It was a strange feeling, but I felt that I'd been through too much to be too concerned about
